THE LEGEND OF BONNY AND READ

Anne Bonny & Mary Read were the most feared women on the high seas and the only two women known to be convicted of piracy during the early 18th century. Their adventure began in the Bahamas, where Bonny began mingling with pirates in the local taverns. There she met captain "Calico Jack" Rackham, who became her lover. It was aboard Jack's ship, while both were disguised as men and serving Captain Calico Jack, that Bonny met Read.

Bonny, Rackham and Read stole the ship Revenge, took on a new crew and set out to sea, pillaging Jamaica and the surrounding area, capturing many vessels and amassing great treasure. In late October 1720, Rackham's ship was anchored off Point Negril, Jamaica, where the pirates were celebrating recent victories in their typical hard-drinking tradition when the British man-o-war Albion surprised them. The drunken male pirates hid below decks, leaving only Anne and Mary to defend the ship. Despite the women's bloody battle on deck, the entire crew was captured and taken to Jamaica, where they were tried on November 18, 1720 and sentenced to hang.

Anne was allowed to visit her lover in his cell before his execution and scathingly told him, "Had you fought like a man, you need not have been hang'd like a dog." Anne and Mary were tried one week after Rackham's death and were also found guilty. But at their sentencing, when asked by the judge if they had anything to say, they replied, "Mi'lord, we plead our bellies." Both were pregnant, and since British law forbade killing an unborn child, their sentences were temporarily stayed.

Legend has it that Mary died of a violent fever while she was imprisoned in a small Spanish town in 1721 before the birth of her child. Other tales have it that she faked her death and was snuck out of the prison under a shroud. There is no record of Anne's execution. Some say her wealthy father bought her release after the birth of her child and she settled down to a quiet family life on a small Caribbean island. Others believe that she lived out her life as a tavern keeper in the south of England, where she regaled the locals with tales of her exploits. Still others say Anne and Mary moved to Louisiana where they raised their children together and were friends to the ends of their lives. To this day, their final whereabouts remain part of their timeless legend.
